

ALASKA PEOPLE FOND OF WILSON, SAYS W. E. WALL

Surveyor-General Back From Trip to North Where He Saw Big Project

If the people of Alaska had a vote for president they would do their best to reelect Woodrow Wilson to that office in the opinion of Walter E. Wall, territorial surveyor general, who returned this morning from the northern territory.

"Thinking men of Alaska are conscious of what the government is doing for that country through railroads and other means," he says, "and naturally they attribute it to the Wilson administration. I found the majority of them hoping that he will be reelected."

Wall says that the government is going about the new railroad in a businesslike way. He saw the huge storehouses and machine shops which have been erected for carrying out the project. Some of the rolling stock that was used in Panama has been transferred to Alaska to do duty.

"Nature is doing her best," says Mr. Wall, "to baffle the experts at the village of Anchorage, where the railroad is to cut in. Silt which comes down from the glaciers to the harbor gathers on the icebergs there in the spring and sinks them and they pile up and close the harbor."

The phenomenon described by the surveyor is very interesting. He says this silt is very heavy and very fine—that a person falling into the water with clothes on will collect so much of it in his garments that he is pulled under the weight in a short time. The same thing occurs to a greater extent on the icebergs with the result that the harbor is closed for it.

Old "mushers" there predict that the federal engineers will have hard work solving the problem, and Seward may have to be used as a port instead for the larger part of the time. Wall crossed the bear country with a pack on his back, carrying a gun in hope of getting one or more of the animals. On the trip he came across an engineer's village where no one was living at the time, and found that bears had torn open some of the store tents and pulled out various supplies, among them a long hose for hydraulic mining.

He experienced considerable difficulty in catching boats, being held upon sand bars by low water at different times. He says the Alaska river boat captain is about the most indifferent person on earth when his passengers are in a hurry, and is always content to sit and wait for the tide to wash him off the bar. Screw propelled boats are able to back off, but boats with paddle wheels only throw up the mud beneath their bottoms and put themselves deeper in it every turn.

The Oceanic steamer Ventura steamed for San Francisco at 11:30 last night, only half an hour behind the time she was posted for. She finished getting her cargo aboard here at 11:30 and left 20 minutes later. The steamer took about 1500 tons of sugar, canned pineapples, bananas and other freight from this port.

The schooner Albert Meyer sailed today for the coast after discharging lumber here. She is taking canned goods to Seattle.

Alleging that her husband beat and choked her, Hilda R. Silva has filed in circuit court a suit for divorce from John R. Silva. She charged extreme cruelty.

LURLINE NIGHT AT HEINIE'S

The passengers and officers of the S. S. Lurline are cordially invited to a dinner-dance to be given at Heinie's Tavern, "on the beach at Waikiki," this evening.

This will be an exceptionally enjoyable evening for all those present, as an excellent menu has been prepared and Miss Jewel Estes will delight all with her catchy cabaret entertaining. The army and navy folk as well as local town people are cordially invited to attend.—Adv.

HEINIE'S TAVERN WILL ENLARGE SPACE FOR DANCING THIS MONTH

Followers of terpsichore will be pleased to hear that the dancing floor at Heinie's Tavern will be enlarged. The floor will be extended to the ocean balcony giving an additional space of 15 by 50 feet for the dancers. It is expected that the improvements will be completed within 10 days.

During the past month the polo enthusiasts have given a number of parties at Heinie's, and this popular cafe has been the headquarters for the polo crowd after all the games. It is expected that the floor space will be completed before the tennis tournament which will be held at Kapiolani Park this month.
